

Guide for evaluating the need for maintenance painting

Scope

Maintenance painting is equally important as other operational maintenance in reducing the risk of unplanned downtime and accidents. This guide provides advice and tips on how a facility can assess any corrosion that has occurred and plan its maintenance in order to prevent problems in the future.

The guide is aimed at maintenance and operations personnel who want to know more about how to assess the need for maintenance painting in their own operations.

Contents

1	Related documents	1
2	Why is it so important to keep an eye on surface protection?	2
2.1	How much can you save through maintenance painting?	2
3	The right skills are important.	3
3.1	Person in charge of surface protection	3
3.2	Maintenance personnel	3
3.3	Surface treatment specialist	3
3.4	Surface treatment operative	3
4	Surface protection maintenance schedule.	4
4.1	Condition checks	4
4.2	Condition checks where there are already identified defects	5
5	Risk areas for corrosion	5
5.1	Combination of dissimilar metals	5
5.2	Embedded goods	7
5.3	Crevice	8
5.4	Other risk areas	9
6	Stages of degradation and measures required.	11
6.1	Remedy immediately	13
6.2	Remedy within 2 years	15
6.3	Remedy within 5 years	17
7	References	18

1 Related documents

The following publications are recommended for further studies in the subject:

- SSG 1000E – “Design and procurement of protective paint system – general regulations”.
- SSG 1005E – “Recommendations for initial painting on metallic materials”.
- SSG 1010E – “Recommendation for maintenance painting (repainting) of metallic materials”.